"Anti-Fascism Is Creative Humaneness, The Answer Of Human Dignity To Brute Force"

In 1950 Professor Peter Viereck, the historian, wrote a long letter to the New York Herald Tribune in which he said in part:

"The time has come for press and pulpit to speak out an unpopular truth, evaded by those who depend on votes and popularity. The blunt fact is that too many Americans are forgetting the central emotional and intellectual experience of our era: the crusade (let us not be ashamed of so uncynical a word), the great crusade against Nazi inhumanity. This tiny, almost invisible, moral flaw is a focal infection poisoning our body politic . . . We have not sufficiently reassured a Hitler-ravaged Europe of our anti-Fascism . . . In 1945 General Patton forced undemocratic Germans to see with their own eyes the skeletons in a local concentration camp. In 1950, democratic but forgetful Americans ought to force themselves to think of these skeletons. Only five brief years ago Nazism was still gassing innocent millions and turning their fat into soap, their gold teeth into foreign exchange. When American soldiers put a stop to this pastime so that Western Europe today is free, did they "die in vain for stupid idealism?" . . . If America now minimizes its anti-Hitler war, it minimizes the noblest and wisest fact in its history. "Who got us into the war?" As a historian, I wish the answer were: "It is we, the American people, who got us ourselves in. We got in because we happen to be human beings, and, therefore, prejudiced against tyrants and torturers. Because we are the product of two thousand years of Christian and Hellenic traditions, compared with which Hitlerism was an obscene word scrawled on the walls of civilization, which had to be wiped off. Because, despite Hitler's and Stalin's appeasers, this small globe can no longer be half-slave, half-free." Unfortunately, the above is not a sufficient answer to why we "got in" . . . The issue of 1939-41 was how to halt, before too late, the "Mein Kampf" program of "Germany, mistress of the globe by the victorious sword of a master race." . . . Today whenever Americans pardon Nazi criminals in Germany or award an official Library of Congress award to a Jew-baiting Fascist traitor or re-elect violent racist agitators, then Europeans tend to assume the motive is lack of democracy or even is Fascism. Their assumption is incorrect. America's real sin is a subtler one: indifference. In our vast anti-Fascist majority, this post-war indifference to Fascism stems not from lack of democracy but from sloth. Anti-Fascism is creative humaneness, the answer of human dignity to brute force."

Now in 1966 there is heard in Canada the metallic, discordant, sounding brass of anti-Semitism. Ontario has its cheap and abusive Nazi leader and at the same time a tender regard for freedom of speech. Quebec has its organization which publishes La Nation as its official organ. In answer to an article in the August issue which charged that the Jews of Quebec were assisting Israel at the neglect of their own province, Saul Hayes, Q.C., the executive vice-president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, of which Michael Garber, Q.C., is president, spoke with the cool, dignified, and justifiable precision as is becoming to a man whose community in the Province of Quebec is two hundred years old, and who also does not need to take a back seat to any other citizen in Canada in the matter of rights.

These rights of citizenship in a democracy cannot be overestimated in any appraisal of the fundamentals of the good life. The fact that every citizen has them makes them more precious and endows him with the obligation and privilege of safeguarding them as a primary duty which enhances his own worth and importance. To maintain his self-respect he will assert his rights, or even one right, stubbornly if need be, against any threat to whittle it away. Anti-Semitism is the first exercize in the totalitarian project of substituting democracy for slavery and must be opposed by all who understand its true purpose, the shackling of the demanding masses who are restless to get ahead.

Anti-Semitism has little connection with the behavior of the Jews. In the first place the conduct of the Jews is just as good and often better than that of many another group. In the second place the sin of anti-Semitism is rooted in a complication of social forces including religion. There is no apology due from the Jews, far from it, and no reason for inferiority feeling to place them on the defensive in this milieu. They could be each one a hundred per cent perfect and the spectre of national unemployment, for example, might elect them to be the scapegoat; or the subject of a brutal address from that hired Nazi, the lowest of the low, in Allan Gardens in Toronto.

During the time of Mussolini, so the story goes, the leader in a small town was ordered to mistreat or assault the Jews. His response was that there were no Jews there and asked for a few to be sent in. In larger places lists of Jewish names were posted so that the Italians would be sure to know which were which.

The insolent fellow who occupies the body of the Nazi leader is a monster, the distant protege of powerful men of power and money who are afraid of discontented masses, of democracy, of full rights for all, of freedom, equal opportunity, and hide. This impudent, conscienceless young man has been assigned the task of winning prospective followers or at least of stirring darkest emotions against the Jews. By now he should be old hat as the enemy of his countrymen, so many of whom he is willing to sell down the river. He has already had physical punishment at the hands of Jews who recognized his pattern from their experiences in prelude to murder in another country.

Any Jew deserves to take satisfaction if for nothing more than self-respect. Human beings were endowed with the instinct of self-defense for self-preservation and when they are menaced it is a natural thing to use it in some form or other toward survival. To hang back is a mistake, a denial of an original right. In one of the Jewish neighborhoods of New York not many months ago vigilantes organized themselves and patroled the streets in cars for the protection of neighbors and youngsters against hoodlums, and nothing more is heard about it, at least for the present. It

"INDEED, THE STATUS OF JEWISH COMMUNITIES, THE EXTENT TO WHICH THEY CAN PARTICIPATE FULLY IN THE LIFE ABOUT THEM, HAS BECOME A TEST FOR THE QUALITY OF THE SOCIAL ORDER IN WHICH THEY LIVE"

Excerpts from an address by Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada, to the Rabbinical Assembly of America, meeting in Toronto, Ontario

Next year Canada will make its centennial. The Jewish Theological Seminary of America will celebrate its 80th anniversary at the same time. Mr. Chancellor, you are the fourth head of this important institution and I congratulate you. I am wondering, however, whether only four Canadian Prime Ministers in eighty years would not cause a certain popular and political restlessness.

The noted scholar, Professor Norman Bentwich, who, was once Attorney-General of the British Mandatory Government of Palestine, once wrote of your second head, that great and revered man, Dr. Solomon Schechter: "He was in his generation at once scholar and teacher, practicing and compelling reverence, the inspiring master of Jewish tradition, and the inspired messenger of a living faith calling to an old-new loyalty".

Dr. Schechter, to whom I pay a respectful tribute, drew from the streams of learning in his native Rumania, in Galicia, Vienna, Berlin, Cairo as well as from Italian and English sources before coming to the United States which had always fascinated him from early youth. The variety of his background may have contributed much to the unique distinction of his services to the Seminary and to education; a distinction which has been earned also by those who followed him.

The Seminary has graduated generations of distinguished rabbis who have served communities in the United States, Canada and abroad. One of your earliest graduates became Chief Rabbi of the British Empire. Your important library with more than 100,000 volumes and 200,000 documents is a hallmark of your scholarship. I was very sorry to learn that it was hit by fire last month, but relieved to learn that your loss was kept to a minimum.

The Jewish Museum and the Teachers Institute are avenues of your important work. You have spanned the continent with a University of Judaism in Los Angeles and the seas with a student centre on the campus of the Hebrew University and an institute of research both in Jerusalem.

Mr. Chancellor, you yourself have summed up the work of the Seminary, the Rabbinical Assembly and the United Synagogue, when you wrote: "The development of profound ideas is the business of the Seminary . . . The most effective method of communicating ideas is to act them out. There is no other way of doing it. If you want wisdom to percolate through the world, then you must first become wise yourself. But being wise and being good involve changing some of our cherished patterns of thought and action. Is that impossible? It is certainly very difficult, but since life and our freedom depend on it, we have no choice but to do it".

The Seminary in its work over the years has dedicated itself to making these changes, wisely and creatively, through education and service.

The pursuit of education and, more specifically, education in the eternal verities, in moral purpose and right conduct has been always characteristic of Judaism. It is one of the things that give Judaism its unique quality, and has made possible its vitally important contribution to civilization. This contribution is one that can be made most appropriately by the Jewish people through the medium of their Judaic heritage.

Today, one part of the answer to every question that faces us, will fall within the sphere of the secular discipline. The other part, however, will involve ethics and morality and will require an approach based on the religious and philosophical traditions which the Seminary has taught for so long. Unless we understand these and have the moral insight that comes from such understanding, we will not be able to find just and enduring solutions for our current problems, national and international.

In these matters, a study of the Hebrew Prophets has lessons for us which are relevant and significant. The prophets had nothing material to offer but they had something which they thought people needed even more than bread; great ideas, great principles, great piety. Thinking of themselves as the "haves", not as "have-nots", the Prophets undertook to show the rich and powerful the meaning of life. In doing so, they succeeded in transmitting a great idea and a great tradition to the world.

From this tradition, Jews have learned how to find a way of life which has a deep and enduring value for us all. It enabled them to distinguish between values which are real and enduring, and those which are only apparent and transitory.

The progress we make in the world today, toward peace, security, and freedom will be determined largely by the ability and willingness of men to make this distinction and act accordingly.

It has been said that security is the ideal of the insecure.

So peace must be in a special way the ideal of those who have suffered from persecution and violence; from hatred and prejudice, as have the Jewish people. In the Seminary you are showing the way to peace through education and understanding. The children of Israel have ceaselessly sought this blessing of peace not only for themselves but for humanity.

A priestly invocation, which is the joint heritage of Christians and Jews, ends with a prayer for peace: "May the Lord bless you and keep you. May the Lord make his countenance to shine upon you and be gracious unto you. May the Lord turn his countenance unto you and give you peace."

I am told that in Hebrew the word for peace means totality, something all-inclusive. The word for evil on the other hand has its root in the word "broken". It follows that a world that is broken is in conflict, while a world that is together in unity and brotherhood is a world at peace.

How far we are from achieving this ideal of peace and oneness. But how much more aware than ever before we are of the necessity of working to achieve it. Now that "science has been harnessed to the chariot of destruction" and we are only a push-button away from obliteration, we know what could be the result of failure.

In this, our search for peace and security, nothing has a more urgent relevance than the universal longing for personal and group fulfilment; for that equality in dignity that has been dramatized by those words "human rights", and "fundamental freedoms". They are now more than words. They embody a significant international movement affecting all peoples. It is right that the world should have a special interest at this time in human rights, because their violation has been so brutal, so recent and so widespread. But the concept itself is not novel. It has deep roots in the history of western society.

This assembly is, I think, an appropriate forum in which to refer to "rights" and "freedoms" because no section of Western society has been more sensitive to, or more profoundly affected by, their fulfilment or deprivation than the Jewish communities of the Western world. Jewish life has become a kind of barometer, as our social systems began to civilize themselves in going beyond mere tolerance into the age of co-operative humanity. The treatment of Jewish citizens has become a measure of civilized behaviour.

Indeed, the status of Jewish communities, the extent to which they can participate fully in the life about them, has become a test for the quality of the social order in which they live. To the extent to which any particular country has welcomed the opportunity to recognize the equality of, and to act with fairness to, Jewish inhabitants, to that extent, it may be said, the civilizing process itself becomes more completely realized.

Reflections on this subject are relevant not only in the context of the general concern we all must have for the claim to human rights in our time, but they are particularly related to this great assembly because, in itself, it is symbolic of the extent to which modern Western civilization, has benefited from the role of Jewish life within it, and from the achievements of Jewish citizens who for so long now have lived among us and have made such a great and fine contribution to our society.

Concern for human rights, will be deeply felt and understood by this audience. But, of course, it is a concern that goes far beyond this or any other community. It must be a concern that covers the community of man; for human rights should be the heritage of all men.

Historically, it may be argued that our standards of human rights today are the product of contemporary Christian ethics, the Hebraic tradition, Roman and English law, and the political achievements of liberal societies which emerged from the 17th and 18th centuries.

But human rights as we think of them today, have a deeper meaning than even the civil liberties we cherish and that are classically associated with the Anglo-American heritage. For today, we think of human rights in economic, social, and welfare terms and, therefore, as going beyond the political and civil liberties that were crystallized in the 19th century, as western law and justice matured.

During and after World War I, many claims emerged in the name of humanity, justice and human rights. The League of Nations and the International Labour Organization both generated new standards of behaviour by governments towards their citizens; and by international agreements supervising that behaviour. I have only to remind you of the mandates system in dealing with a whole range of inequalities. Treaties included protective devices for minorities not able to defend themselves in a fragmented, and unsettled Europe.

World War II brought new levels of human rights awareness, dramatically expressed in the Charter of United Nations. The Charter gave human rights and fundamental freedoms a political and constitutional significance that went far beyond anything known before in international relations. Indeed, these clauses of the Charter and the universal declaration of 1948, together set up an ideal of human rights and a programme to achieve it that was to become as significant for the international community as were the peace and security provisions of the Charter itself.

There was an immediacy and urgency about the issue for the atmosphere in which the Charter and the Declaration were written, was charged with the memories of concentration camps and gas chambers, unspeakable horrors and vile discriminations. This was the awful time when the image of western man reached its lowest point since the wars of religion four hundred years ago.

Out of the Charter and the Declaration came the efforts to achieve treaties which would bring to reality these new ideals and standards. Broadly speaking, these documents had really three great objectives: (1) Fair and equal treatment under the law and procedures, in all countries; (2) The broadest prohibitions against discrimination on grounds of race, creed, sex or colour; (3) Equality of opportunity for everyone, a chance for everyone to share the best that mankind has to offer.

Slowly, very slowly and with many setbacks, international and domestic programmes since 1950 have been evolved that are better than we might have expected, if not as good as we had hoped for.

For example, the recent success of the General Assembly of the United Nations in December, 1965, in adopting the draft convention on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination was a great move forward in the international protection of human rights. The proposal now before the human rights commission for the creation of the High Commissioner of Human Rights opens the door to interesting, though complicated, programmes of enforcement.

Finally, the development of regional programmes of human rights, of which the European convention on human rights is the most significant achievement, suggests that we may be approaching a time of greater experimentation in regional co-operation for the advancement of such rights.

In Canada, our concern with human rights is shown in federal and provincial legislation; in our fair employment codes; in fair accommodations practices legislation; in our discussions about the future of Canadian constitutional development.

In Ontario, a royal commission on civil rights has been examining in great detail many of these problems as they arise within the scope of provincial jurisdiction.

Our record has on the whole been a good one. But we have nothing to be complacent about. I think it is time for Canada to consider other forward steps in these fields.

Two or three weeks ago, Dean Maxwell Cohen, of McGill University, in an address here in Toronto, proposed the establishment of a National Council on Human Rights, to be made up of federal and provincial governmental representatives as well as non-governmental organizations that are interested in various aspects of human rights questions.

This council, as I understand it, would be advisory in nature and would provide a sounding board for creative ideas to be sent on to federal and provincial discussions about future legislative programmes. This is a proposal that should be explored by governments and the private organizations concerned.

These problems of rights and freedoms; of race and bigotry; of discrimination, prejudice and violence are not merely local or national. They are, as I have said, the concern of all mankind. They know no national boundary. They take on no national pattern. They are the guilt of no particular people. We must condemn them wherever they appear; whatever form they take.

Nor can we solve the problem by governmental action alone: national or international.

No Parliament, no world assembly can control human emotion by legislation or resolution. Political action, cannot remove ugliness nor induce beauty.

Governments, laws, and courts, can no more put peace and brotherhood into the hearts of men than the United Nations can put peace and brotherhood into the hearts of nations.

No written law and no mere declaration, no matter how eloquent, can ensure good behaviour or create human dignity.

I was told the story some time ago, from rabbinic lore, about the two brothers who lived as neighbours. One was married and the other was not. The unmarried brother woke at night and thought of the family responsibilities of the other. He got up and took from the stores in his barn and put them in the barn of his married brother. Later the married brother awoke and remembered his brother without children to care for him in his later years. So he took from his stores and placed them in the barn of his brother. In the morning each was startled to find that his own supplies were not diminished.

On the second night the brothers, again unnoticed, gave their gifts to each other. On the third night they met between the two barns. When each saw what the other was doing, they embraced with deep emotion. We are told that the Lord blessed the spot where the brothers met in peace and brotherhood and on this place was built the Temple of Solomon.

Basic Tenets Of Israel Foreign Policy: "Our Wish Is For Peace, But We Intend To Maintain Our Strength"

Extracts from the Budget Speech of Abba Eban, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Israel, March, 1966

International Brakes on War

The factors operating to stabilize the existence of Israel are more numerous and powerful than those designed to upset it. Besides the deterrent and defensive strength that Israel possesses and the support stemming from sympathy with its national and social undertaking, Israel derives aid and reinforcement from the very essence of the present general international actuality: an actuality which is not inclined to wars that might tend to disturb existing territorial and international facts . . .

Abstention from the use of force to effect changes in the frontiers of sovereign States has become accepted doctrine in the policy of the United States and the Soviet Union, of Western and of Eastern Europe — and, in the nature of things, also in the policy of small States which together make up the bulk of the international community . . .

The United Nations

Although Israel is virtually harnessed to her concern with the problems that are the result of the enmity directed against her in our region, she will go on living, ever more vigorously, the life of the family of nations to the full . . . Israel will, no less, apply herself particularly to solicitude for those questions that affect her from the standpoint of her historic responsibility as the Jewish State.

Let me give one important example: Israel's initiative to secure the specific inclusion of the condemnation of anti-Semitism in the draft of the Convention for the Prevention of Religious Discrimination.

United States

In my conversation with President Johnson on February 9 and in my many and lengthy meetings with the Secretary of State and other representatives of the United States Government and of the two Houses of Congress, I encountered manifestations of goodwill and friendship to Israel and of willingness to help us in solving certain of our central problems.

The statement published in Washington regarding the supply of Patton tanks to the Israel Defense Forces reflected a positive attitude towards Israel's efforts to prevent any serious dislocation of the balance of security. I hope that the present negotiations between the United States and Israel on economic programs of cooperation will soon be successfully concluded.

The variegated economic aid which the United States has furnished Israel in the last fifteen years has been an important and influential element in the consolidation of our economy and its expansion and in the stepping up of our productivity.

Soviet Union

In his address to the Knesset on January 12, the Prime Minister enumerated the arguments which, in our opinion, ought to lead to closer relations of understanding with the Soviet Union in favor of the principle of abstention from the use of force as a solution of territorial disputes; its further explanation that this principle applies to all sovereign States; the highly significant appearance of the Soviet Union as assisting in a direct agreement in the dispute between India and Pakistan; the announcement of the Soviet Union that it is interested in arrangements of peace and co-existence in every other place — all these serve as a logical basis for the holding of a dialogue, through diplomatic channels, in the hope that the Soviet Union will reveal with greater clarity its support for the independence and the integrity of Israel and of all States in this region, and its opposition to every plan or thought that is based on the forcible alteration of the existing territorial and juridical structure . . .

Germany

Diplomatic relations with the Federal German Republic . . . are not designed to terminate the searching dialogue between the two peoples, but to provide a regular periphery within which to continue it . . . The precise implementation of the Reparations

A LOVE AFFAIR WHICH ABIDES WITH UNABATED VIGOR

By Dr. W. Gunther Plaut, Rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple, of Toronto, in the Toronto Globe and Mail

The attachment of the Jew to the Holy land is dictated neither by reason, nor by economics, nor by politics. His relationship to the land of Israel is founded on that irrational element in life which gives depth and meaning to man's existence and which we call love. Israel and the land of Israel represent mankind's most continuous love affair, an affair which has lasted through agony and separation and which abides with unabated vigor.

Seen objectively there is little enough to recommend this land. It is small, oddly shaped, too narrow at the waist and too long at its extremities. It suffers from the typical hot-and-cold, dry-and-rainy middle eastern climate, has deadly borders and almost half of its area is composed of desert. Most of the soil has become rocky, after waste and neglect during the last 1500 years have allowed the precious top layer to erode.

In ancient days the land served as a bridge between east and west: armies tramped across it decade after decade, leaving despair and pillage in their wake. Politically it was an insignificant country; economically it was hardly viable. Rarely were the owners of the land masters in their own house.

Yet this unlikely land was and became the Promised Land, the birthplace of the Bible, the land where men responded to God more keenly than anywhere else, where they saw visions seen rarely elsewhere. This is the land to which more than half of the earth's population looks with a sense of holy awe. To Christian, Moslem and Bahai, the land of Israel is a Holy Land, and so it is to Jew – only more so.

It is truly a remarkable story, this love affair of the Jew and the Holy Land. Every day in their prayers the children of Abraham would offer petition for the ultimate return. To be able to die in the land was considered a sacred privilege and many a Jew went there to spend his last days in the country of his dreams.

In Jerusalem and at the shores of Lake Tiberias, up in the mountains of Safed or by the shores of the Mediterranean, dwelt scholars immersed in studying the holy texts and preparing for the day when the Lord would remember His chosen ones. Their brethren from all over the world would send donations to maintain the faithful students of Torah and Talmud. They were the harbingers of a better day when the oppressed Jews would be freed from their chains and would be allowed to return.

Yet, as the centuries passed, that day seemed further away than ever. Individuals or small groups would travel to the land as pilgrims or settlers, but the mass of the people continued to live in the lands of dispersion.

Then, after some false fits and starts, there arose toward the end of the last century an unusual man, who deserves to be better known in the annals of world history. His name was Theodor Herzl.

He was a Viennese journalist, a dreamer and romantic. He was in love with his people and the land, and he came at the right moment in history. He managed to transform the latent energies of Jews, as well as of many Christian friends and fellow lovers of Zion into a political movement which in two short generations resulted in steadily increased immigration, the conquering of the swamps, the reforestation of the barren and stony hills, the taming of malaria and the settling of the land. The climax was the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948.

Acre by acre (or as they say in Israel, dunam by dunam) the land was purchased from the Arab owners. Slowly and laboriously European ghetto dwellers and immigrants from Canada and the United States transformed themselves into farmers to till the ancient soil.

In the process they learned that no man could tame the rocky desert by himself, but that only by total social and economic cooperation could the recalcitrant environment be mastered. So the kibbutz arose, a voluntary communal structure where all men worked for each other, in which money played no role, and common achievement was the supreme goal of all. Today, although the large cities tend to overshadow the importance of the kibbutz, it remains at the core of Israel's agriculture, and agriculture remains the heart of Israel.

It is a unique land, this sacred piece of earth. It bubbles with many languages and teems with immigrants from every part of the world, yet its basic tongue today is the tongue of Moses, Isaiah, Hillel and Jesus. All of these could walk the streets of Jerusalem and Haifa and feel at home. Children study the Bible in their elementary schools as a text-book on literature, history and geography, and they study it in its original language. The Hebrew of the Bible is closer to the Hebrew of the market place than the English of Shakespeare to the English we speak.

Everyone who visits the land these days comes back with a portion of that infatuation which has characterized the Jewish people for 3000 years. The traveller is impressed not only by the vital energy of the nation and the industrial growth of its economy. The creation of a western oasis in the midst of a slowly emerging oriental middle east, the transformation of ghetto-dwellers and refugees from North African slums into proud and free citizens of a modern democracy—this would be impressive enough. But there is something else that has to do with the land and its spirit.

The land has a mystique all its own. I remember a journey many years ago, in the mid-Thirties, when I made my first pilgrimage to the land. On the boat with us was our teacher, the late Professor Martin Buber. It was evening, and we were in sight of the hills of Haifa, that beautiful city which ranks among the garden spots of the earth. The night was clear and the stars seemed ever so close. And Professor Buber said: "Look at the stars. Where else is heaven as close

IMMIGRATION AND CANADA'S MANPOWER

Address by Tom Kent, Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, to the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, Mr. Jean Marchand, asked me to convey his regrets that he is unable to be here. On his behalf, I want to express our very best wishes and congratulations to all those completing courses at the Citizenship School and to those who make possible the school and the many other good works of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada.

All of us in the Immigration Service are aware of the excellent JIAS programs which serve so many of Canada's new residents. Nothing better illustrates the objectives and the spirit of JIAS than your Citizenship School. This is a wonderful example of the way in which governmental and voluntary efforts can complement one another in the immigration field.

There is a real need for better counselling and language training facilities for immigrants after their arrival in Canada, not to duplicate existing services but to ensure that immigrants know what help is available, and to bridge the gaps which inevitably exist. JIAS is a very real leader in this field.

Being here today is a doubly important event for me. I say this because, first, I am privileged to join at a significant moment with a group of public-spirited people doing useful and exciting work. But also, today means a great deal to me because it gives me an opportunity to talk, primarily about immigration, whereas most of the talking I am required to do nowadays is, inevitably, about the new manpower responsibilities of our department.

I therefore very much welcome the opportunity to be with you. I welcome it particularly as an immigrant myself, who has shared with many of you the great challenge and personal adventure of immigration. And I welcome it as a Canadian citizen who joins you in a firm conviction that a strong and vigorous immigration program is essential for our country.

I am sure you do not want me to talk about the technicalities of immigration. There are people among you who are better able than I to do that. What I shall try to do is to talk about the philosophy of immigration in the context of the new Department of Manpower.

As you know, the Prime Minister last December announced an extensive government reorganization, perhaps the most far-reaching ever undertaken in this country. Among the changes announced was the transfer to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration of the responsibility for all Canada's national manpower policies and programs. Although only a few months have passed, the new Department is rapidly taking shape. The intention is also, as you know, to ask Parliament to rename us the Department of Manpower.

This new Department is a tremendously exciting and momentous development. I would like to share it with you by giving you some insight into our plans. I particularly wish to say a few words about our developing concept of immigration policy as part of our over-all manpower policies, and also about the fact that some important aspects of immigration make it unique and different from the rest of the Department.

Before I say anything about immigration policy and its integration with national manpower policies, I should say a little more about Manpower, the Department, and some of the reasons for its creation.

Successive governments have developed a variety of programs designed to improve the utilization of our human resources. Many are good programs and the new Department has not come into existence with the idea of scrapping all the present programs and replacing them with new ones. Far from it. But we do believe that the programs can be made much more effective within a single agency which can also plan, develop, and implement the new programs that are required.

The new Department brings together the National Employment Service, the Immigration Service, the training, rehabilitation, mobility and winter employment programs, the Manpower Consultative Service, and groups responsible for economic and social research and labour market analysis. All the active manpower programs will be the responsibility of one strong, integrated national manpower service with offices across Canada organized to give a full range of advice, counsel, and service to worker and employer.

These offices are the place where manpower programs are brought home to people. The test of our success is whether each area office plays a full and vital part in the life of its community, whether it earns the community's respect as the place to which both workers and employers confidently turn when they want advice and help about employment. We must be able to advise people accurately and quickly how they can improve their ability to do a better job and where, when qualified, they can get a better job,

That can be said very simply. To do it is very difficult and is going to require a very complex and competent organization of dedicated and understanding people.

This new organization will exist to serve the whole community. But it will give special attention to people whose employment involves special problems. And very important among those are immigrants. The new organization will deploy a range of facilities for counselling and placement which we intend to make far more effective than those that have been available hitherto. In the case of immigrants, this should mean that we can absorb a larger number of people and distribute them more evenly into vacant jobs across Canada.

This brings me to immigration, and its role in the Department. I suppose the first question I should answer is why the Immigration Service is being incorporated into the Manpower Department at all. I have heard some people express the fear that putting Immigration into Manpower will lead to an immigration policy dictated solely by economic considerations, without regard for the social and humanitarian factors. There also seems to be some fear that the union of immigration with a department responsible for employment could result in a timid and vacillating immigration policy, over-reacting to every fluctuation in economic and employment conditions.

I know that you who believe in immigration and appreciate its importance to Canada are aware of these fears, and are anxious to have them set at rest. I am glad to be able to do so.

Immigration will be part of Manpower because that is where it belongs. As no one knows better than you, immigration consists of people; people of all kinds striving to achieve the best that is in them.

Those same words express the essential concern of the Department of Manpower. All our work will be dedicated primarily to bringing together people and opportunity. We will be doing this on a much more comprehensive scale than was possible before.

If there is an impression in some minds that Manpower will arbitrarily shift people about, or manage them, or engineer them, then it is a very wrong impression. Government in Canada cannot act that way, and we are certainly not going to try.

What we can and will do is set up the most efficient service we can, decentralized across Canada, in order to help people help themselves, to open more doors for them. We will try to ensure that the opportunities that are good for the national economy are available and rewarding to people. We can improve the opportunities and the incentives for the individual. But we must always remember that whether the individual chooses to take advantage of new opportunities is up to him. Our job, in relation to the individual, is to counsel, not to decide.

Let me put the same point another way. The purpose of Manpower policy is to help people to get better jobs and do better jobs. If we can do that, we make a most important contribution to the growth and progress of Canada.

If this sounds familiar, so it should, because it is what the Immigration Service has been doing, in part, for years. The motto of Immigration has been, and will continue to be, "people and opportunity". It fits right into the philosophical framework of the new Department.

I can see no basis at all for the fear that economic and manpower planning tends to impede immigration. Quite the contrary. An active manpower policy calls for an active immigration policy. It makes immigration more effective in fostering the growth and prosperity of Canada. It will be good for immigration.

Surely one has only to measure the past and present contribution of immigration to Canada to appreciate the continuing need for it. Immigration has greatly helped to improve the quality of our labour force, to increase productivity and the competitiveness of our exports, to make our economy more flexible and responsive to change, and to generate employment for those with lesser skills.

This is all true, but in reciting the advantages we derive from immigration I certainly don't want you to think that I view immigration like an accountant totting up a ledger, or an economist dealing in cold statistics. We all know that immigrants have made even greater contributions of the spirit. Courageous newcomers pioneered Canada. New blood, new ideas, new enthusiasms refresh and invigorate our land and people.

Manpower is more than economics. It is people. And in putting Immigration into the Manpower Department there is every realization that the role of immigration is not to be measured solely in economic terms. Canada's social and cultural development also benefits greatly from a wise and comprehensive immigration policy. That fact is and will remain in the forefront of our plans and our work.

I have spoken of the benefits Canada gets from immigration. Canada needs people from other lands. But also, people from other lands need Canada. The creation of the new Department does not signify any change at all in our recognition of responsibility to permit the admission to Canada of people who need a place of refuge

NUTRITION ACCORDING TO THE TALMUD

By Rabbi Nahum Ben Horim; notes and addenda by Dr. Solomon R. Hagan; in The Hebrew Medical Journal which is now out of print

Rabbi Nahum Ben Horim cites many Talmudic statements regarding the hygienic rules of nutrition in health and disease. Among other valuable suggestions he quoted from the Talmud and other sources of ancient Hebrew literature the following rules:

It is of importance to have a regular time for each meal. Sudden changes in eating habits may be detrimental to the health of the individual. Sudden changes in food induce intestinal maladies. More diseases come as a result of overeating than from hunger.

The food, utensils, and clothing of persons afflicted with contagious diseases are the sources of the spreading of those diseases. The Talmud commanded that the hands be washed before each meal, and advised rinsing the mouth after meals to prevent diseases of the teeth and gums. "When tasting soup, do not pour the remains back into the pot," said the Talmud. If you bite into a slice of bread, do not offer it to another to eat because it is injurious. The Talmudists knew about the presence of poisons and parasites in certain foodstuffs.

It is said in the Talmud: Do not eat large masses of food, use a knife, masticate your food thoroughly, and eat slowly. He who eats slowly lives long. Do not speak during a meal, because the food may enter the trachea; it is dangerous. Eating while fatigued as well as poor mastication results in gastro-intestinal maladies. It is harmful to go to sleep immediately after meals. One should arrange to sit, stand and walk in equal proportions.

Insufficient supply of food results in malnutrition, and weakness. Lack of salts in the foods causes disorders in the system. The Sages of the Talmud emphasized many times the importance of digestibility of food and urged the regulation of meals. When one eats his breakfast in early morning, he becomes healthy and active; the regular time for breakfast depends on the profession and the habits of the individual. The Talmudists considered cooking as a sanitary means of rendering food safe, as the heat required for thorough cooking kills all forms of infection. Care of the stomach was considered as the basis of health.

The ancient Rabbis emphasized that food for eating must be free from parasites and decay. It should be fresh and prepared in proper and sanitary form for the purpose of digestion. Foodstuffs were to be kept in clean dishes and covered to protect the food from foreign matter. Warm fresh bread was regarded as harmful. The Rabbis advised that one should not eat food that the system could not digest.

Children were to have a diet different from that of adults. Meat, wine, and spices were considered as unsuitable foods for infants and children. Food in general must be ripe and easily digestible for the maintenance of the health and vigor of the body. As a rule, the Talmud recommended a varied diet, in moderation. They had an understanding of the composition and digestive value of foods.

Thus, one rabbi highly recommended proteins as a nourishing food; another emphasized the values of carbohydrates in general as a source of energy, and vegetables as a factor for digestion. The rabbis made the following order of the value of some foodstuffs: meat fish, eggs and vegetables. There were also contradictive opinions among the authors of the Talmud concerning the value and indications of various foodstuffs.

It is of interest to note that the Sages of the Talmud advised that the amount of food one is to eat should be in accordance with the climate and season, occupation, exercise, age, sex, body weight, and state of individual health.

The ancient rabbis pointed out the importance of a pure and balanced diet in the prevention of diseases. They knew about the presence of poisons and parasites in certain foodstuffs. Old unpreserved food was considered unhealthy for man. Beef was to be thoroughly cooked to kill its parasites. The authors of the Talmud regarded the following foodstuffs difficult to digest: meat of an ox, fat, roasted meat, poultry, fried eggs, almonds, nuts, cheese and liver.

According to the Talmud, the diet of a pregnant woman has an influence upon the strength, character, and complexion of the child. An insufficient supply of food results in malnutrition and weakness. Lack of salts in the food causes disorders in the system. When one daily eats his breakfast at the proper time, he becomes healthy and active. Regular time for breakfast depends on the occupation and the habits of the individual. Rabbi Chisda said: "A man who attends school and has not sufficient bread, should not eat herbs, because it creates hunger; a young pupil who lacks food should not eat a little at a time; he should wait until he can accumulate sufficient food for a healthy meal, and then eat."

Rabbi N. Ben Horim quotes the Talmudic saying that one should not eat in darkness, as the sight is an important factor in developing of an appetite by stimulating the digestive activity of the stomach. This statement points to the famous Pavlov's classical experiment on the dog.

The Sages of the Talmud emphasized the importance of hygienic cleanliness. They said: Drinking from unclean glasses may do harm. Water suspected of contamination must be boiled before drinking. The ancient Rabbis said: It is unhealthy to eat or drink while standing. A cold drink in a heated state is dangerous. Some epidemics were explained by the Talmudists, as the result of using infected water.

In order to keep water free from contamination, the Sages of the Talmud advocated the removal of putrid matter from the vicinity of the water supply, and no carcasses, tanneries, brick ovens, or cemeteries should be located near a water supply. According to the Talmud, it was forbidden to drink water that flowed through filthy places on account of the danger of contamination. Impure water is dangerous, was warned many times by the Talmud.

Rabbi N. Ben Horim cites the Rabbis saying that one should not drink stagnant water as many insects and eggs of flies are found there, and it may be a source of dangerous diseases. In connection with this, it may be of interest to remark that the Talmudists had an idea of the presence of microbes and their role in man's life as the cause of certain diseases. It is said: "There are many germs and insects that are dangerous to health. They are minute organisms existing everywhere in abundance. If man could see them all, he could not exist."

The ancient Rabbis stressed the great importance of a pure and well balanced diet in the prevention of diseases and expressed their opinion regarding the value of the main foodstuffs which the human beings need for their health. With regard to bread they said that it is the basis of nutrition, without carbohydrates a man cannot live. Only pure bread free of harmful ingredients is the source of health and energy, and helps the activities of the digestive tract. Crude bread which was not purified in the proper manner may be harmful to the body.

With regard to meat it is of interest to note that the Sages of the Talmud did not consider it as a necessary foodstuff, like bread, but recognized its value as a pleasant food and a source of increasing the blood in the body. They advised moderation in eating meat, and pointed out that roasted meat contains more blood, but it is difficult for digestion. They advised that patients and convalescents should avoid the eating of roasted meat. Rabbi Chisda said: "When I was rich I ate meat and fish in place of vegetables."

The Talmudists stated that fish is easier digested than meat, and therefore advised eating of fish as a useful food which will not cause gastro-intestinal disturbances. They also said that individuals who have a sensitive stomach should prefer the eating of fish to that of ox meat or even white meat, as fish is easily digested. They even prescribed fish to patients who usually require a mild diet. With regard to canned salted fish the Talmud advised to eat only those which were properly canned, else it might do much harm as poisonous food.

The Talmud considered eggs as a very important foodstuff both as a nourishing and easily digestible food. They advised that fresh eggs be given even to patients suffering from intestinal diseases. According to Rabbi Janai any food having the same weight as an egg in comparing food values, would be much lower in caloric standard than the egg itself. Eggs and milk increase a nursing woman's supply of milk.

Milk was considered an excellent food particularly for infants and children. The Sages of the Talmud believed that milk is of great benefit to the stomach. Fresh warm milk was also recommended against cardiac pain, particularly milk of a goat. They believed that in malnutrition or in loss of vitality resulting from serious sickness, milk of different animals is of great service. They said that a man can exist solely on a milk diet.

The Talmud considered vegetables as a necessary foodstuff and said that a town which is lacking gardens of vegetables is not a proper place for residence. It was believed that vegetables increase the appetite and help digestion. At the same time the Rabbis emphasized the importance of using them only after a thorough washing, as unclean vegetables may be a source of disease.

The Talmudists regarded fruit with high favor and emphasized their role in preventing constipation. They also remarked that a student should avoid a town where there are no orchards. They advised to wash thoroughly the fruit before eating them, as unwashed fruit may cause illness.

The Sages of the Talmud considered wine not only as a pleasant drink and stomachicum but also as a remedy in certain diseases. Thus, old wine is a valuable tonic and is of benefit in certain intestinal diseases. The Talmudists recommended wine to women because it increases the secretion of breast milk. They also prescribed wine as an external remedy in baths against sweating, backaches, headaches, and other diseases. On the other hand they warned against excess in drinking wine, as it is capable of causing vomiting, dizziness, and insanity. Rabbi Saul said that he observed degenerative processes in the bones of dead men who were drinkers of alcoholics. Rav said that alcoholic beverages should be diluted with two or three parts of water in accordance with the type and strength of the beverages.

The sages of the Talmud recognized the great value of water in the maintenance of health. They said a student should not reside in a town where there is no proper water supply.

Rabbi Yochanan said: The world may exist without wine, but not without water. Water prevents intestinal disorders and constipation, and it is advisable to drink water in moderation before and after meals. It is imperative to drink water with each meal. Among all drinks and beverages water is the most beneficial. It is not advisable to reside in a town where there is no pure water. Some water is beneficial for drinking only, some for bathing only, and others are beneficial for both purposes. The drinking of water which comes in contact with filth and refuse is forbidden, on account of the danger of contamination. It is important to drink plenty of water, and to wash the mouth frequently, to prevent an offensive odor in the mouth. Some waters contain certain minerals and are remedies for certain types of disease. Water does not build the tissue of the body, but the latter requires it.

Hot water was considered by the Talmudists as a remedy for certain maladies. It helps digestion and prevents constipation, and helps maintain the normal body temperature. Rabbis advised the drinking of hot water mixed with wine or other stomachicum as a tonic. Hot water was recommended by the Talmud both for drinking and bathing purposes as a preventive and curative factor.

The Talmudists proposed the application of alternate temperature for the purpose of increasing the tone of the system and the stimulating of the vital centers to increased activity. They also advocated a cold shower to follow the taking of a hot bath. This is likened unto heated iron being plunged into a cool bath to temper it

IN THE TALMUDIC TRADITION

By Corinne Wittenberg, teacher of English in a Fort Wayne, Indiana, high school; in American Judaism, quarterly publication of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. This story was adapted for radio and was heard under the title, Do You Know Who You Are? on the award-winning radio series, Adventures in Judaism, which originates over WCBS in New York

The Sisterhood Study Group had assembled in Mrs. Abrams' living room, and the women were waiting more or less patiently for Rabbi Stillberg to arrive. The four quickest thinkers had brought their coffee and dessert to the card table and were eating in comfort; the others were seated on the couch and side chairs, holding the fragile cups in one hand and balancing the dessert plates on their knees. Mrs. Abrams' end tables were so covered with Copenhagen figurines, philodendron plants, and tiny porcelain ashtrays that only a fortunate few managed to find a place to put a cup and saucer.

"Well, where is he?" asked Rhoda Abel of her cohorts at the card table. "It's one forty-five, and we were supposed to start at one-thirty." "Being late is a rabbi's privilege," observed Adele Goldman.

"If you ask me, it's more like an occupational disease. They're all alike," put in Sylvia Kahn.

Carolyn Samuels, the Sisterhood president, felt that she should explain the situation. She was sitting on the couch, but her ears were attuned to the various conversations around the room, "Once a month he'll always be late," she announced. "Everybody wanted to change the Study Group to Thursday; but that's when the Carillon Club meets, the fourth Thursday of every month at twelve. I told the rabbi he couldn't make it, and we could skip this Thursday—"

"Oh, he wouldn't do that. We've got a good thing going here," said Ruth Miller.

"Yes, but by the time he comes, we'll be lucky to get in an hour before everyone has to leave. At least I have to; my children get home at three-thirty." Carolyn Samuels was worried. Several times the school bus had beaten her home, and the children were waiting outside. She had felt guilty for days afterward.

"Of course, he could leave the Carillon Club a bit early," suggested Adele Goldman slyly. The subject of the Carillon Club produced a charged silence, which crackled through the room as the women exchanged glances. The Carillon Club, a social-intellectual group, met over luncheons and listened to papers prepared by the members on current topics. It had even more prestige locally than the Country Club composed as it was of the most prominent business and professional men of the town. Very few Jews belonged to it.

Rose Frankel was vaguely conscious of the fact that she had missed something. She had not been paying attention, or she would have mentioned in her quiet, diffident way that Rabbi Stillberg was largely responsible for the better relationship which now existed between Jews and non-Jews in the community. She could remember other times. The women's conversations resumed where they had left off, and Rose Frankel's thoughts returned to planning what she would pack when she went to California next week to visit her daughter. This trip she would stay only ten days at Marilyn and Jack's house. She wanted to go up to San Francisco anyway; and now that the Rosenbergs had moved there, it would be a wonderful excuse. Two women in the same house, even if it is your own daughter – especially if it's your own daughter . . .

Rabbi Stillberg parked his car in the Abrams' driveway. He was going to be very late, no doubt of that. He conscientiously tried to be punctual, but he never quite made it anywhere on time. Well, it wouldn't matter too much; the women were probably enjoying themselves over coffee and small talk.

He cleared his mind of the Carillon Club discussion (in which he had acquitted himself quite well, he thought) and concentrated on what he was going to say to the Study Group. He enjoyed these sessions. There were sixteen Sisterhood women who attended them religiously – much more religiously than they attended Friday night services.

He pushed the bell and listened to the musical chimes echo through the hallway over the low chatter within. Mrs. Abrams greeted him and took his coat. The occupants of the card table moved their chairs back to make room for him and his notebook; and Sally Klain, her high heels clicking on the parquet floor, brought him some coffee.

"Just let me get my breath a minute," he smiled at them. The fantasy of himself as a rooster surrounded by hens flickered across his mind, as it occasionally did at the many female meetings in which he participated. He glanced about him at the assembled coterie of matrons and wondered idly what the old ghetto scholars would have thought of this turn of events, the women rather than the men carrying on the tradition of Jewish study.

"Would you like some dessert, Rabbi?" asked Mrs. Abrams.

"No, thank you. Just the coffee is fine – it revives me." November was still early in the rabbinical year (the pale afternoon sunlight filtered weakly through the windows), but already Rabbi Stillberg felt tired. Perhaps he was trying to do too much. The demands on his time and attention, the perpetually conflicting interests, the rushing from one place to another, were certainly depleting his energy. He was well aware that some of the temple members objected to his community activities which, they said, had resulted in neglect of his congregation. Did it just seem that the complaints were becoming more numerous lately? Rabbi Stillberg was not particularly concerned by the talk; the same people had been dissatisfied with his predecessor for being too "parochial" and not doing enough in the way of public relations.

"Rabbi, I think we'd better get started. Some of the girls have to leave at three," suggested Mrs. Fein, acting in her capacity of Study Group chairman.

"Yes. Well, last time I promised we would get into the problem of good and evil in the world, the natural disasters and the man-made ones. I had said that God is responsible for the good, is perhaps synonymous with the good, in nature, in man, and so forth; and one of you asked me if God is responsible for the good, then why should He not also be responsible for the evil."

"That was I, Rabbi," interrupted Adele Goldman. "I wanted to know if we were supposed to accept – I mean if modern Jewish thought accepts this business of God having His eye on the sparrow. Every time I read in the paper about little children being burned to death or people dying in tornadoes, I wonder where God's eye was then. And what about the six million Jews the Nazis killed? Surely not all of those people were so sinful they deserved to die? I'd rather think there was no God at all than a God who allows such things to happen."

"That's the 'God is dead' concept," said Sylvia Kahn. "We've already established the fact that the universe is so intricate and perfect that a Master Intelligence must have planned it. The question then is: Did He just walk away from it?"

"There, Sylvia!" exclaimed Rhoda Abel triumphantly, "even you are using anthropomorphic terms!"

"Touché," agreed Sylvia Kahn.

"I don't think the universe is so well-planned," Sally Klain whispered to her neighbor more loudly than she intended. "There must be a better way of having babies." This received an appreciative laugh from the women.

It did not disturb Rabbi Stillberg that some of the more articulate members of this group were near-atheists. At least they were worried about it. The view-points of the sixteen women ranged from Conservatism through Reconstructionism to Ethical Culture, which was, thought the rabbi, to be expected in a Reform congregation. They were, for the most part, well educated and well read and not at all reluctant about stating their opinions. Of course, there were a few, like dear Rose Frankel, who never said much and who were no doubt content to attend merely for a change from the shopping and card games which filled their widowed existences.

"Adele touched on an important point before," he continued when they had quieted down. "The idea that evil or death is visited on the sinful, those who deserve it. Now this was a rather prevalent idea in our early history. You remember the Book of Job when friends call upon him in his affliction and ask him what secret sin he had committed to bring all these misfortunes on himself. Naturally, Job denied . . ."

. . . Carolyn Samuels tuned out of the discussion. The rabbi was always repeating himself or going off on tangents which had little or nothing to do with the heart of the matter. Ask him what time it is, and he tells you how to make a clock! Besides, she had to figure out what to have for dinner. Something quick that she could pick up at the supermarket on the way home.

There was more to being Sisterhood president than simply rapping the gavel at meetings, especially when you had two children continually vying for your attention and a husband who stays glued to the television set every night. The Sisterhood president was supposed to go to all the temple functions, and at home the telephone rang constantly — people called her about the least little thing! Oh well, she thought, this is the last of my term.

Has the rabbi finished with Job yet? This Study Group was shaking the slender hold on faith she had; sometimes it's better not to examine things too closely. You support the temple for your children, and they grow up and support it for their children — maybe she'd have lamb chops if they weren't too expensive. Honestly, buying meat these days is like buying a piece of furniture!

" . . . The Christians of the third, fourth, and fifth centuries were also having trouble with the idea of the all-powerful Creator-God being involved with the affairs of men. To take over on mundane matters they adopted the Stoic concept of the Logos, which is now called the Holy Ghost. This is one of the reasons for their Trinity; this, and the problem of the Virgin Birth and what rank Jesus should hold in relation to God. It got to be a very complex philosophical disagreement and was partly responsible for the split between the Greek Orthodox and the Roman Catholic churches."

"The Catholics have the right idea about religion," said Mrs. Fein, "everything's set down for them; they have an authority. What do we have?"

"Are you sure you'd want an authority?" asked the rabbi. "Definite dogmas which you must believe in or be consigned to eternal damnation?"

"You'd have to believe in eternal damnation in the first place," countered Ruth Miller. "But really, what basis for faith do we have?"

"We have the Bible, the accumulated experiences as a monotheistic people for four — some say five — thousand years, the Talmud, an interpretation of those—"

"She means we don't have the same kind of faith our forefathers had, which may have been what enabled them to exist for four thousand years." Sylvia Kahn was acting as interpreter. "They believed that the Bible was literally the word of God, that God spoke and the thunder rolled. Look at the Ten Commandments. Except for the first two, none of them have to do with theology. They're all about morality, and everyone pretty much accepts the moral laws. You don't have to be Jewish to live a good life."

"Actually the Chinese honor their parents more than we do," added Adele Goldman.

. . . That's true, thought Rose Frankel, and I could use a little honor from my children and grandchildren. Things were still just the way they were when Marilyn was growing up, some kind of mother-daughter chemistry which erupted into explosions over nothing at all. Then poor Jack would be caught in the middle, like Harry used to be. Jack reminded her so much of Harry — they say girls often marry men who are like their fathers. It had been eleven years since Harry Frankel had died, and only lately had his widow been able to think about it. She was anxious to see her grandchildren; they were such bright, healthy, inquisitive little things . . . Our daughter has a fine family, Harry; I wish you could have lived to know them. Was that fair, God? To take him away so soon and with no warning! What kind of a God are You?

" . . . The Gnostics developed a whole eschatology along these lines," Rabbi Stillberg was saying. "They decided that the God of the Old Testament was the demi-urge, the maker of this world only, and that Jesus was sent by a more elevated universal God. They considered the demi-urge to be the enemy of Man because he forbade Adam and Eve to eat of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge and, therefore, the Serpent was the friend of Man. The Gnostic's basic tenet was that the only way to know God was through knowledge."

"Sounds like Plato," said Sylvia Kahn.

"Oh yes, they were undoubtedly influenced by Plato," the rabbi agreed. "However, I should add that snakes, representing the Serpent, were a regular part of their ritual; they let them crawl around during their services."

"Ugh!" exclaimed the members of the Study Group in one voice.

"Eventually the Church decided the Gnostics were heretics."

"Rabbi, we still haven't answered my question," said Adele Goldman. "What kind of a God do we Jews believe in?"

. . . Rabbi Stillberg reflected that it had been more than twenty years since he had graduated from H.U.C. What did they want from him anyway? He couldn't guarantee that there really was Something, that death was not the end, that there was some meaning for

IT'S ON THE CARDS

By C. C. Aronsfeld, in Jewish Affairs

My Rosh Hashanah cards, with their splendid wishes that rarely come true, no longer crowd the mantel-piece, and the bookshelves have been cleared of the fanciful overflow. It was nice while it lasted, a preview of the merry mail that will arrive at Christmas – some perhaps from the very same friends, which reminds me of the Jew who felt most annoyed at receiving Christmas-greetings from fellow-Jews and retaliated by sending them cards with all the paraphernalia of Christian Orthodoxy – the crib, the babe in swaddling clothes, the Holy Virgin, shepherds galore, at least one ass, and stars and crosses all over the place.

I am not criticising the outraged co-religionist, because, in his crude fashion, he rather seemed to be taking Christmas seriously and would not allow it to be demoted to a nondescript "Xmas."

Personally, I do not discriminate among those who wish me well, either at Christmas or at Rosh Hashanah.

I confess I enjoy the artistic design of the cards more than anything else. The Youth Aliyah cards intrigue me with the way their largely unknown and unconventional artists choose to illustrate Bible passages. Take as an example, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Ziva Shisha shows you boys and girls camping together, but the great thing – the symbol of harmony – is the powerful blood-red flame that is leaping up amongst them; though why the same gifted lady has chosen (on another card) a reference to the Feast of Weeks seems not so clear.

Etzion-geber, by the Red Sea, drawn by Norbert Nadell, has a fine oriental touch, and I am not sure how far Margaret Kroch-Frishman had her tongue in her cheek when she chose the words "For the tree beareth its fruit" to illustrate a massive cluster of vigorous cacti.

And then there is, time and time again, Jerusalem – a bright water-colour of the old quarter, by Shaul Ohaly, or a tenderly sketched skyline by the better known (though quaintly named) Yehuda Bacon. On other cards, Jerusalem looks stylish and visionary, like the city built in "England's green and pleasant fields," "in Primrose Hill and St. John's Wood." A very different card, one of the finest I had, was the 13th Century miniature, in gorgeous blue-green and purple of "King Solomon reading the Torah" (albeit a little upside down, I feared), dressed up like a courtier of Richard Lionheart.

Looking at the abundance and variety of them all, I cannot help thinking of at least one of the pioneers, perhaps the most remarkable, a fellow-Jew, who first devised this agreeable feature of our festive season: Raphael Tuck, founder of the famous firm of art publishers. As an individual now largely forgotten, he was (one might hardly believe it) strictly orthodox and an accomplished Talmudic scholar. In fact so Orthodox was he that he withdrew from what seemed to him the less exacting milieu of the official community, and founded, with David Gestetner, engaged in a similar trade, the North London Beth Hamidrash, now a fortress of Agudah.

It was because of his intense study that he would not take up business until he was 21, and when he retired, in 1880, at the relatively early age of 59, it was for the purpose of devoting himself entirely to the Talmud. At the same time, the Tuck family (which no longer owns the firm) happens to be peculiarly linked with Liberal Judaism too: a granddaughter of Raphael, Muriel, married Leonard, the son of Claude G. Montefiore.

Such is the irony of history that this Orthodox Jew, who took pride in nothing so much as his long line of forbears distinguished by Hebrew piety, is now chiefly remembered as one of the foremost patrons of the Christmas Card. It was Raphael Tuck (originally Tuch) who, first in his native Prussia, then, since 1866, in London, developed and refined this particular specimen of commercial art. In doing so, he helped "create quite a new trade," the Times said in 1883, and "opened up a new field of labour for artists, lithographers, engravers, printers, ink, and pasteboard makers, and several other trade classes."

The first to organise a big competition to encourage new designs, Tucks were also (it was gratefully remembered at Raphael's death, in 1900) "the first to recognise the trend of public taste in Christmas cards to which they gave a higher artistic character than had previously been given them." But the pecular thing is that even in the more religion-conscious Victorian age the Christmas card did not chiefly convey, either in text or in picture, the religious and spiritual significance of the season but rather the more general message of goodwill to all men, and it was perhaps this that attracted Tuck.

By the time the founder retired, Messrs. Tuck had produced 180 different sets with 700 designs. There were exquisitely executed Christmas cards, "christened Raphael," said a famous commentator, "which must be at once suggestive of the highest Art," though Punch also paid tribute to the performance of another Jewish practitioner in this field –

There are none sublimer
Than those of Hildesheimer.

The great expansion of Tucks began under Raphael's son Adolph, likewise a pillar of Orthodox Judaism. He soon added the picture postcards which, oddly enough, were not known until then. In doing so he too virtually launched an entirely new industry. He also helped to revive the Valentine, "without its vulgar associations," as a Victorian student remarks.

For these undoubted public services, Adolph was made a Baronet in 1910, after his firm had regularly produced special Christmas cards for the Royal Family since 1893. His brother, Gustave, a co-director, was for many years president of the Jewish Historical Society of England.

Not the least of Tuck's imaginative ideas was to rope into the business, as a director, Arthur Conan Doyle, the creator of Sherlock Holmes. If neither Rosh Hashanah nor Yom Kippur figure in those grand detective stories, one reason presumably is that the strictly Orthodox Tucks long obstinately stuck to Christmas. It was not till the turn of the century that they also began to produce Jewish New Year cards.

But of course the balance has since been redressed, and had his maker lived, Holmes might by now have started to explore the problems of Halachic practice, though whether he would have pronounced them "Elementary, my dear Watson," is by no means certain. However, this is a question leading dangerously away from the pleasantly innocent subject of the cards we receive and, I hope, quietly enjoy as a New Year begins.

THE NATURE OF JEWISH DISTINCTIVENESS IN THE U.S. AND ISRAEL

By Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld, of Cleveland, president of the American Jewish Congress, speaking in Israel, at the Annual "Dialogue"; at the Weizmann Institute

Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld of Cleveland, president of the American Jewish Congress, warned at Rehovoth, Israel, that the Jews of the U.S. and Israel were abandoning the cultural and ethical values that have made the Jews a distinctive people.

Rabbi Lelyveld singled out nation building in Israel and assimilation in the U.S. as the main pressures accounting for the weakening of traditional values among the Jews of both countries.

He spoke to forty American Jewish and Israeli scholars, writers, and religious leaders during a three-day exchange of ideas at the Weizmann Institute on "The Nature Of Jewish Distinctiveness In The U.S. And Israel."

The "Dialogue," sponsored by the American Jewish Congress, has been held annually since 1962.

Both the sabra (native-born Israeli), Canaanite Jew in Israel and the assimilated Jew in the U.S., Rabbi Lelyveld said, now reject the distinguishing value-stance born out of the Jewish religious heritage and folk experience. As a result, he said, the heritage of Jewish values has been blurred and now faces the danger of being erased entirely.

In another address, American Jews were urged to follow the lead of the Catholic church by working within the Orthodox tradition to meet contemporary issues and thus ensure Jewish survival. The proposal was made by Dr. Irving Greenberg, professor of history at Yeshiva University, in New York. Dr. Greenberg told the "Dialogue" that the key to Jewish continuity in America lay "not in modernizing or secularizing Judaism but in confronting the modern world with an indigenous Jewish theology rooted in traditional Judaism rather than Western culture, combining integration and separateness."

He noted, however, that most Orthodox Jewish groups appeared to link the religious way of life with obsolete social and historical patterns.

"The Israel rabbinate in particular," he said, "seems to symbolize this difficulty. Perhaps we should invoke the principle that religion is too important to be left to religious people alone."

Rabbi Lelyveld listed five main aspects of Jewish distinctiveness:

The stubborn conviction of the Jew's special role in the world (akshanut). Concern for the suffering of all living creatures (rachmanut and tsa'ar ba-aley chaim). Insistence on the importance of learning (Talmud Torah).

An openness to truth and a capacity for pluralism (emet).

The assertion of man's role in this world rather than in a world to come (m'shutaf l'hakodosh baruch hu).

These values, Rabbi Lelyveld said, have been distorted by the pressures of the post-emancipation world, including the exigencies of establishing a Jewish state and of adjusting to the non-Jewish society of the U.S. He noted, however, that even among those who consciously reject the Jewish heritage, a residue is often present. He said the disproportionately large number of Jewish participants in the American civil rights and peace movements was due in part to this residue of Jewish traditional concern for the hurts of others, frequently found even among highly-assimilated Jews.

Rabbi Lelyveld cautioned that the contemporary Jew who provides his label "Jewish" with no distinctive content has either conformed to another culture-image or has become empty of any distinctiveness at all. Looking toward the future, Rabbi Lelyveld said that the distinctive Jewish value-stance could survive in the contemporary world only through a consciousness, however reinterpreted, of group continuity and group purpose, combined with broad knowledge of Hebrew as the language in which Judaism's value-terms are embedded and a continuing dedication to the historic task imposed on the Jewish people through its covenant: the sanctification of life.

"In a world still filled with violence, still menaced by prejudice and disrespect for human personality; a world facing new threats of dehumanization, the task of the Jewish people cannot be said to be completed," he declared.

Dr. Greenberg said the "profound ambiguity" of Jewish identity in America was that the Jew is kept Jewish by certain contemporary experiences while he remains highly vulnerable to the increasing Jewish saturation with modern urban culture.

"We are at a moment of pivot, before the tide begins to run remorselessly," he declared. "There is enough Jewish identity and activity to create a specific set of Jewish ways and memories at least for a minority of the Jewish people. To continue to drift, however, means to allow more and more Jews to discover that they are really modern men rather than Jews, and to act out this discovery. This is what is going on in college circles, accounting for the high rate of intermarriage and alienation from Jewish life."

Dr. Greenberg rejected the idea that Jewish survival could be ensured by developing contemporary and secular Jewish definitions and culture. He expressed doubt that such a civilization could be built rapidly enough to hold on to the bulk of Jews who might simply elect to go right into Western civilization."

A more likely prospect for fostering Jewish identity, he said, was to work within the framework of the Orthodox tradition. He conceded that, for most American Jews, such a notion would seem "inconceivable".

"Let us say then," he added, "that no matter what policy we undertake, a significant fraction of the Jewish people will not follow. However, since any attempt at the status quo involves the loss of many Jews anyway, it may be the lesser cruelty to take a frankly, more committed approach, whatever the cost in immediate defection.

"The relevance or feasibility of living by the tradition depends on the existence of a living community, a holy community, which should be exemplary enough to attract and hold loyalties but sufficiently engaged in contemporary life to be a reasonable alternative to total assimilation for most Jews. Some of the possibilities inherent in this group will only be grasped when it emerges into full flower. Perhaps the current developments in Catholicism can give us an inkling of the dynamic potential involved."

In addition to Rabbi Lelyveld, who is a Reform rabbi, active in the U.S. civil rights and peace movements, and Prof. Greenberg, an Orthodox rabbi, the American panelists included: Leonard J. Fein, of Boston, professor of political science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Max Frankel, of Washington, chief diplomatic correspondent of the New York Times; Prof. Maurice Friedman, of New York, a leading authority on Martin Buber; Louis H. Pollak, dean of the Yale University Law School; and Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, of New York, a liberal Orthodox spokesman.

Among the Israeli panelists were: former Deputy Minister of Defense Shimon Peres; Israel Supreme Court Justice Haim Cohn; chief education officer of Israel's Defense Forces, Aluf Mishne Mordechai Baron; Deputy Minister of the Interior Israel Ben-Meir; and others.

What's your stand on special life insurance for executives?

Mr. Gilbert: What do you mean "special"? I've never heard of special life insurance for people like me.

Interviewer: Let me tell you about the Executive 50 plan offered by The Mutual Life of Canada.

Mr. Gilbert: You mean you have to be 50 to get it?

Interviewer: No. It's available to men from 20 to 75. The minimum policy is $50,000.

Mr. Gilbert: Must cost a bundle for that kind of coverage!

Interviewer: That's the big feature of the Executive 50—the rates are exceedingly low.

Mr. Gilbert: That so?

Interviewer: What's more, it provides lifetime insurance, excellent cash and loan values, and participates in Mutual Life's high surplus earnings.

Mr. Gilbert: It strikes me the Executive 50 would be ideal for business insurance.

Interviewer: Or for providing immediate cash for succession duties and other estate purposes—without tying up too much of your money.

Mr. Gilbert: Now you're talking!

Interviewer: Your nearest Mutual Life of Canada representative can give you complete details. Why not give him a call?

Left to right are: The Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada; Dr. Stuart E. Rosenberg, 34 Sultana Avenue, Toronto, leader of Beth Tzedec Synagogue, in Toronto; Dr. Louis Finkelstein, Chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York City; Rabbi Eli Bohnen, President of the Rabbinical Assembly of America; and Senator David A. Croll, Q. C., 1603 Bathurst Street. The Prime Minister had received the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws from the Chancellor of the Seminary, the first head of government in history to get a degree from a Jewish religious institution. This historic first in the history of Judaism took place in Toronto, at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, on May 18, 1966, at the 66th annual convention of the Rabbinical Assembly, the first international one to take place in Canada. Rabbi Rosenberg, chairman of the convention, welcomed to Beth Tzedec three thousand people who attended an academic convocation of the Seminary which honoured Prime Minister Pearson. In the procession were national heads of Christian Religious denominations in Canada, Presidents of Universities, Deans of Arts, Sciences, Law, and Theology; and in addition, hundreds of Conservative Rabbis, members of the Assembly, paid honour to the Canadian members who serve Conservative congregations across Canada, from Halifax, Nova Scotia, to Vancouver, British Columbia. In his address, Prime Minister Pearson said: "Jewish life has become a kind of barometer, as our social systems began to civilize themselves in going beyond mere tolerance into the age of co-operative humanity . . . Indeed, the status of Jewish communities, the extent to which they can participate fully in the life about them, has become a test for the quality of the social order in which they live." Rabbi Finkelstein, Chancellor, likened the Dominion of Canada to the Jewish people. Both, he said, have significant contributions to make, precisely because they could not be suspected of seeking power or domination. They are both international in outlook, yet small in number; concerned with worldly order, yet committed to the principles of pluralism and peaceful co-existence. Rabbi Rosenberg had invited a Reform colleague, Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, of Holy Blossom Temple; and an Orthodox leader, Rabbi Joseph W. Kelman, of Toronto, to offer the opening and closing prayers. This was done to underscore the indivisible unity of the Jewish people and the historic significance of this convocation for all Jews, everywhere.

He studied for five years at the Rabbinical School of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in New York, and spent his junior years at Hebrew University in Jerusalem as part of the Seminary-Israel program. In 1964, he graduated as rabbi from the Seminary, with the Master of Hebrew Literature degree, and was awarded the Codes Prize for an essay on rabbinical jurisprudence. "Emphasis on youth and the identity of young Jews with Judaism will be paramount in the design and development of our synagogue as well as in its programming and ritual and religious practices," Rabbi Libman said. "In contrast to most congregations where leadership is left to the synagogue elders and the more established members, at Hebrew Men of England, active direction of synagogue affairs is already passing into the hands of members in their thirties and twenties. This is the age group from which our membership is being drawn." Studies are being made of experiments in school construction in Scandinavia and Switzerland, countries with comparable climate patterns to Canada, to determine the best architecture and design for new educational and religious buildings.

TRENTON, Ontario

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lunenfeld, of Switzerland, formerly of Galt and Toronto, Ontario, and their son-in-law, and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Kunin (Sybil), of Switzerland, gave a handsome residential complex for visiting scientists at the Weizmann Institute of Science at Rehovoth, Israel. Pictured above are, standing, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lunenfeld and their grandson, Mitchell Kunin, aged eight years; and Leonard Brockington, C. M. G., Q. C., L.L.D., D. C. L., a celebrated Canadian jurist, who has been Rector of Queen's University, in Kingston, Ontario, since 1947. Mitchell is the brother of Michael, aged seventeen years; and Barbara, fifteen. Mr. Brockington gave the main address at the inauguration, devoting the major portion of his remarks to the importance of education. The impressive ceremony was attended by the Israel Minister of Labour, Yigal Allon; and the donors of the buildings, the Lunenfeld and Kunin families. Meyer W. Weisgal, chairman of the Weizmann Institute's executive council, recalled his association for more than three decades with Samuel Lunenfeld, first in Canada and more recently in Switzerland. Mr. Weisgal paid tribute to Mr. Lunenfeld's continuing support for the Weizmann Institute over two decades. Greetings were tendered by Mr. Allon; Professor Shneior Lifson, the Institute's scientific director; Professor Fred Karush, of the University of Pennsylvania, who spoke on behalf of visiting scientists residing in the buildings; and Itzhak Katz, Mayor of Rehovoth. The chairman presented Scrolls of Honour to Mr. Lunenfeld and his son-in-law, Mr. Kunin, and Mr. Lunenfeld responded. Plaques on the buildings were unveiled by Mrs. Lunenfeld and Mrs. Kunin. The buildings to house visiting scientists can receive twenty-four families in sixteen tastefully furnished one-bedroom, and eight two-bedroom, apartments. They will facilitate the growing exchange of scientists and scientific knowledge between the Institute and other centres of research and learning all over the world. This year the Institute is host to sixty-eight scientists from fourteen countries, who have come to work for several months to a year in the Rehovoth laboratories; in addition to the hundreds who have come or are coming for shorter periods of time. The largest number of this year's long-term visitors is from the United States; others are from Canada, West Germany, the United Kingdom, Holland, Australia, Brazil, Japan, Switzerland, Belgium, France, Hungary, Italy, and Sweden.

"Within a generation there may be no more Jews left in the Soviet Union unless there is a dramatic change in Russian policy." Prof. Joffes, a former Harvard and Boston University Law School professor, said, concerning the Jews in Russia: "The culture and heritage of more than 3,000,000 Jews are being destroyed through deliberate efforts of Soviet authorities. The matter is further complicated by alien factors such as the continuing Cold War. One of the international objectives of the Bnai Brith is to help rescue those people."

When the shofar sounds

In the days of the shepherds on the slopes of Sinai, the ram's horn called the sheep back to the flock. Today as Jews everywhere turn back to a contemplation of the age-old truths first proclaimed by the prophets and then given to the world, we join with them in the greeting that they be "inscribed for a New Year"... a year of health, happiness and prosperity.

No, he thought, putting the idea out of his mind, contemplating that possibility was like another kind of death. At any rate, the Study Group was a challenge. He cleared his throat and prepared to throw down the gauntlet as soon as Adele had finished speaking . . .

"When we talk about God, we talk as if He were some kind of white-bearded patriarch – I've heard you do that yourself in the pulpit, Rabbi. Intellectually, of course, we think of Him as a sort of disembodied spirit. I remember at one of the other meetings, you started giving us the attributes of God, and then we got off on something else. You said God was invisible, omniscient, omnipotent, and I forget what else; but that 'omniscient' and 'omnipotent' bothers me. If God is aware of everything and all-powerful, then why doesn't He prevent evil?"

"Sure... I bought Belleville"

And not only because I like it here, although that's a big factor. I bought Belleville because it's near the two major markets, and has really good rail facilities.

Just as important is the excellent, stable labour force. I have no trouble hiring good, loyal employees. I'm in good company too! Did you know there are 25 industries located in Belleville? And as I said, I like it here. There's a friendly atmosphere, and lots of good facilities for weekend leisure. Where else would I want to live?

These and a host of other reasons why Belleville can offer more economies to you as an industrial location, are contained in detailed information available from: Belleville Industrial Commission, City Hall, Belleville, Ontario.

We'll welcome your enquiries.

BASIC TENETS OF ISRAEL FOREIGN POLICY

Agreement according to the commitments and principles which Dr. Adenauer espoused in 1951 made an important contribution to the development of our State, although it may certainly be said, with absolute assurance, that it cannot constitute atonement for what is beyond all possibility of atonement.

We cannot be blind, in that context, to the fact that the authorities of East Germany have as yet taken no step which might indicate acknowledgement of the historic obligation that rests on Germany in the light of the most shocking and shameful brutality that ever vexed mortal man . . ."

Latin America

The salient feature of our relations with the States of Latin America is their constant deepening and enlargement. We may observe with satisfaction that, so far, the recurring and repeated attempts of the Arab States to sabotage what is already a traditional friendship between us and the countries of this important subcontinent have been frustrated.

The inimical utterances of Arab representatives against us which were delivered in the tri-continental conference in Havana had almost no echo at all; indeed, in the press of Latin America, tremendous indignation was voiced against Egypt which, on the one hand, proclaims its aspiration to friendly relations with the Governments of the sub-continent, while its representative at the Havana conference declared support for the underground movements that

Africa

There are today 29 Israel Diplomatic Missions in Africa. But even that impressive total does not fully reflect the significance and the extent of Israel's presence in the great Continent. The number of Israel specialists in Africa in the year came to as many as 606 out of a total of 832 who are presently on duty throughout the developing world. And out of 2,154 trainees who came from eighty different countries to take courses in Israel, more than half (1201) were African men and women . . .

Africa has not yet fashioned for itself the image of government of leadership and of management that will answer its needs. But the tension and the shocks that mark the present situation in a number of African States, grave though they are, cannot darken the brilliance of the triumph of the great African movement of liberation, as one of the positive phenomena in this twentieth century world of ours.

Even out of political instability,

L'shanah tovah tikatevu!

Rosh Hashanah is a time of family gatherings. The long, hot days of the summer are over. We face the Days of Awe and then the festivals of the fall season. The wine happily called Mazel Tov is a wine everybody will enjoy, a wine you will "remember". It will bring back memories of other wines you have sipped, of other Yom Tovim.

Mazel Tov is made, like the other wines you remember, of Concord grapes, grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula. It is a richly honest wine . . . a wine of memories.

Although Mazel Tov is made strictly "Kosher l'Pesach", it is available all year 'round.

"INDEED, THE STATUS OF JEWISH

So brotherhood, and all it stands for, begins in man's heart. If it does not live there, then you will not be able to impose it by decree on the man, on the family, the community, the nation or on humanity.

If today all men accepted their own individual responsibilities towards humankind, instead of expecting Governments, courts and laws to do all things, the great crusade for the Brotherhood of Man would indeed be possible of realization; and the essential and enduring values of civilization could never be destroyed.

This is an ideal, I know, that seems far away today. But it is closer than it would otherwise be, because of the dedicated work and service of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America with whom I am now so proud and honoured to be associated.

if it is probably understood, it is possible to construct a developmental stability, and Israel will maintain and even expand its cooperative program to the extent that the African Governments invite it . . .

Israel and the Middle East

The friendship which we cultivate throughout the world is itself a vital asset of Israel. It is also an oblique but vitally important political aim. Every country that maintains normal relations with Israel, that refuses to yield to pressure and blackmail, that places its relations with Israel beyond the reach of the negative influence of our antagonists – every such State, in so doing, brings the prospects of peace nearer. The more Arab enmity finds itself isolated, the weaker it will continue to become . . . On the other hand, every State that is deterred from openly and unequivocally establishing friendship with Israel, for fear of "what the Arabs will say," is merely helping to perpetuate Arab enmity and to encourage it, even if unwittingly . . .

The whole subject of the quarrel is the existence of Israel, no more and no less . . . Discussions about the refugees, about "gestures", about declarations and all the rest can therefore have only a tactical influence; certainly they do not get anywhere near the heart of the matter. If only Arab leadership were ready to reconcile itself to the simple fact of Israel's existence, then it would be disposed, too, to accept the consequences of that existence.

The question is whether Arab leadership is capable of grasping the deep and true quality of the Middle East. That region embraces the Arab people, but that is not all that it embraces. The region was never occupied by Arab concepts alone. Its characteristic peculiarity is a tendency not to "Arab unity" but rather to diversity and multiplicity, through a meeting and a ramification of many cultures, languages, national memories and sovereignties . . .

Never have Arab leaders or thinkers made an effort to comprehend how deep are the roots of the Hebrew people in this region and how burning is their attachment to it. There are others in the world, too, who have fallen into the error of failing to understand the powerful link between this people and this Land – a link whose most highly tempered parts are the memory of an earlier independence and eighty years of national implanting in the last two generations.

Realistic thinking on the Middle East must take into account both Israel's right of existence and the desire of all peoples in the Middle East to be free and independent, not only in respect of States outside the region but in respect also of those within it. Let one thing be perfectly clear. Peace is very much wanted by us, and it is necessary for all the peoples in the region. But it is not a condition of our actual existence.

Eighteen years of the new Israel have demonstrated the capacity of our people to foster attachments, links and sources of aid outside the limits of the region in which we live, if it be fated that we must do so. We aspire to peace not because we cannot live without it, but because it is natural to live under its wings.

The Arms Race

If there is no escape from the absence of definitive peace for a further period of time, it is necessary to strive for co-existence based on a stable balance of forces. We should prefer to see the total cessation of the arms race. But if, thanks to the policy of other powers and of countries in the Middle East, the race goes on, we shall not be found lagging behind in it . . . Pronouncements from across our frontiers threaten various kinds of aggression, including a 'preventive war' . . . Against a preventive war, as against any war, one must take all measures of preparedness and defense.

It is my duty to make the position of Israel clear beyond all possibility of misunderstanding. Our wish is for peace, but we intend to maintain our strength, and we are irrevocably determined to repel any attack and to parry any blow aimed at the vital interests of the State.

There is an unbreakable nexus between the arms race and the political postures that speed it up. It is difficult to assume disarmament without parallel abandonment of the ambition to attack. A State that seeks to destroy a neighboring State is hardly likely to enter into effective agreements to protect the security of the intended victim.

Only a Middle East all of whose States abide in peace with each other can be free from the constant interference of competing external elements. The paradox is that those Arab leaders who demand that foreign influences be removed from the Middle East are the same that actually invite them in by reason of the tensions of enmity that they keep alive in it . . .

Maintenance of the balance of arms; the mobilization of as many international influences as possible for the support of the independence and integrity of all the States in the region; the need to advance towards a firmer regime of peaceful coexistence – these have been, these will continue to be, the main themes of the unremitting conversation that Israel conducts with all the States of the world on the problems of the Middle East.

The Gift of Judaism

Over and above all the rest of its purposes, Israel must stand by the special tasks that stem from its Jewish character. The gift of Judaism to the entire world is enshrined in the sublimity and the profoundity of its unique ideas and values.

and a chance to rebuild their lives.

There is no change in our acceptance of a fair share of the international responsibility for the dispossessed and displaced people of the world. There is no lessening of our concern to facilitate the reunion of divided families. It is not generally realized that, of the 2½ million post-war immigrants to Canada, fully half have been refugees and sponsored immigrants who were admitted without any imposition of requirements about education or skills.

I think we must be very clear about the various factors involved. Because immigration is such a vital factor in Canadian growth and development, because it affects so many lives, it is essential that immigration be carefully planned and executed; it must be closely related to truly national objectives. But that does not mean it has to be inhuman or unfeeling or unjust. On the contrary, it means that, to the best of our ability, immigration must be administered in accordance with the basic principles of justice and humanity which Canadians demand in their national endeavours.

Those are high and important principles. Let me try to minimize the risks of misunderstanding by passing on to some more specific points about immigration policy and programs.

First, immigration is different from the other parts of the new Department in that it involves a major regulatory responsibility which very often gets us into hot water. Also, the Immigration Service operates a world-wide network of recruitment and examination offices which deal with the governments and people of most countries in the world.

For these purposes there will be within the Department, a strong and distinct Immigration Service with a full capacity to plan and implement immigration programs. The part of immigration activity that will be integrated with domestic manpower organization is the placement, settlement, and counselling operation in Canada. The purpose of that is not only to continue but to improve the services provided to immigrants.

There has been a great deal of work done in the Immigration Service in recent years to modernize and reorganize its facilities and strengthen its staff. In many of these ways, I may say, it is ahead of the rest of the Department and we are leaning heavily on the experience and involvement of the Immigration Service in developing the Department as a whole.

There has also been extensive work done in reviewing immigration policies and legislation. That does not merely continue. The work has been intensified. Our Immigration White Paper has been in preparation for some time. It is slow precisely because it is so important. It is not delaying our thinking on particular problems. A number of important preparations are being made. My Minister and his predecessors have made no secret of their own views on some important points on which changes are desirable, and I am therefore free to mention these to indicate the general direction of our current thinking.

For example, we think that no immigrant in Canada should be deported for reasons which are not his fault, such as accident, illness, or involuntary indigency. Again, the existing immigrant medical prohibitions must be brought into line with modern medical and sociological concepts, especially with respect to certain types of mental illness and epilepsy.

Our deportation system must be over-hauled in order fully to guarantee the rights of the individual. At the same time, we need to establish more effective control of illegal immigration, without hindering or restricting the rights and freedoms of individuals or imposing irksome bureaucratic processes.

These points can be made fully effective only by changes in the legislation, and those are being planned. But meantime, principles of the kind I have indicated can and do guide our thinking and our action as much as possible from day to day.

The Immigration Regulations set very clear-cut rules for the admission of sponsored relatives. Although we are often criticised for it, the Department's duty in chocolate cherry cake and the blueberry torte had been splendid successes. Some of the girls had already copied down the recipes — and the house had looked nice although she hadn't noticed before how shabby the upholstery on the wing chair had become. Perhaps no one else had noticed it either. She rose to lead the way to the hall closet.

Now that the Study Group was officially concluded, most of the younger women hurried into their coats, said their goodbys, and rushed out to their cars in order to be home before their children arrived from school. The others broke up into more informal clusters and continued various aspects of the discussion.

Ruth Miller was talking about a rabbi she had heard lecturing in another city. "He was a Reform rabbi, too; but he thought we should all refrain from eating pork. He didn't think we should go along with all the dietary laws or anything like that; but we should give up pork as a sort of symbol, to identify ourselves with Judaism."

"Did he mean a symbol or a penance?" asked Rae Salzburg humorously.

"Oh, he was serious. He started out first by saying that we American Jews are losing our identity. Not that we're converting to Christianity, but that we're in danger of becoming just nothing at all."

"Well, he's certainly got a point there," said Adele Goldman. "In the big cities half the Jews don't even belong to a synagogue — I read that somewhere — but I can't see that eating pork has a thing to do with it."

"Anyway, the Moslems don't eat pork either," added Sylvia Kahn. "Besides I don't like that word 'discipline'; I suppose he wants us to scourge ourselves three times a day while we're at it."

"A lot of these rabbis just say controversial things like that to stir up — make us think, you know."

Rabbi Stillberg usually lingered after the Study Group was over, but today he had to excuse himself. He had an appointment with a couple who were about to get a divorce unless he could talk them out of it. He had a good idea of what the trouble was, and he wondered if he really had the right to try to reconcile them. Maybe they'd be better off . . . you don't expect this kind of thing from Jewish people; it happens, but you don't expect it . . .

Rose Frankel was driving back alone to her neat little apartment with its white carpets; only a widow whose grandchildren lived far away would have white carpeting. The rabbi was better when he stuck to history, she decided. He had such interesting bits of information like the Gnostics and their snakes.

As for the rest of it, what could he possibly say? If you analyzed the whole thing intellectually, man is just another part of nature, like a blade of grass or a fish. We're born, we feed upon each other, and we die. Isn't that how Sylvia put it?

And yet, lately there were times when she had a very real sense of the immanence of God. Now as she drove along the river road in the late afternoon traffic with the sky a hazy lavender-gray behind the gray stone of the bridge ahead, the wispy trees bare of leaves against the wind, she felt as if God were all around her.

The bitterness she had carried inside like a sharp stone ever since Harry's death had dissolved somehow without her being aware of when or how it had happened. Next week she would be with Marilyn and Jack and the children, and tomorrow she would go downtown and buy some gifts to take with her.

There is more to man than just his intellect, Rose Frankel concluded; there's a continuance of things, a pattern. A soft blanket of peace enveloped her, and she felt at one with the universe and its Maker. It had taken her eleven years to absolve Him of Harry's death, to admit that He existed again for her. The certainty was as comforting as it was inexplainable.

and to give strength to the metal. Warm baths are of greater importance than medication, said the Talmud.

Considering the Talmudic knowledge of nutrition, we see that the Talmudic physicians were familiar with the problem of nutrition, with the value of various foodstuffs and their effect on the body. Many rules of the ancient Hebrew physicians and rabbis are in accordance with those of modern medical science. The Talmudists also had knowledge of local and constitutional diseases and their therapy by diets, to a great extent, in accordance with modern views. The Talmudic sayings in reference to nutrition are of great interest from a historical point of view.

to man as in this strange, unique and wonderful land?"

I never forgot those words. Whenever I looked up at the firmament above me I knew I was in a special place, truly a Holy Land. And so, ultimately, the people who dwell there, Jews and Christians, Moslems and men of many religions and of none, somehow know that theirs is a special land and a special responsibility. They are building a commonwealth which is meant to be unlike other nations.

It is one of the tragedies of history that this old love affair between the Jew and his home land had engendered so much hatred and distress. Yet this too will pass, for Jews ultimately take no delight in fighting and warring. Their password is Shalom — peace — and they not only say it, they mean it.

To know that Israel exists is of significance to every Jew, the disinherited Jew of the Soviet Union and the safe and secure Jew of North America. There, somewhere between Jerusalem and the sea, between Akaba and Hermon, between Dan, Beersheba and Eilat is a land in which he has a share. Whether he expects to live there or merely make a pilgrimage, there is a land in which the holy tongue is spoken and two and one-half million of his brethren dwell; there is a land that welcomes the poor and wretched of the nation.

If Israel is still today a land of contention, it will be tomorrow's land of peace. In its full glory, with all its promise and possibility, it will be what it has always been: a Holy Land — and who knows but that it may again become the birthplace of new and saving insights, a source of spiritual nourishment for the yearning hearts of men.

this respect is a matter of law and is therefore, basically, quite clear. We implement the Regulations. The area of decision concerns our general recruitment program, the immigrants we seek out and bring to Canada. It is about those immigrants that we have to answer the questions: Who? and how many?

Some staunch supporters of immigration are apparently afraid that the Manpower Department will not want to admit any immigrants who may conceivably be burdens on our employment and training services. They suspect that we will jack up our selection standards to the point where none but the most highly skilled or professional workers will be admitted.

I must admit that those fears are partly our fault. There is a tendency for officers of the Department, including the Deputy Minister, to brag about the highly skilled people we are getting. And I confess that we use terms like "skilled" rather loosely and too often. But I think you can appreciate why that happens. No one, I am sure, would doubt that we have a primary obligation to seek out people whose services are in short supply in Canada. Today this ranges over virtually all the professions and skilled trades and many semi-skilled trades; it ranges from nuclear physicists to experienced farm workers.

It surely is right that we should emphasize these scarce skills. But that certainly has not meant and does not mean that we don't want other people. Certainly not. The Regulations to the Immigration Act are very broad in describing who may be admitted to Canada as unsponsored immigrants. In brief, anyone with sufficient education, training, skills, or other special qualifications to enable him to establish himself successfully in Canada may be admitted with his family, provided they are all of good health and character.

The key idea, it seems to me, is adaptability. We don't help the individual, and we don't help Canada, if we admit people who can't adapt themselves successfully to conditions in Canada.

The concept of adaptability is, I think, what is ignored when people see an inconsistency between sponsored and unsponsored immigration. Other things being equal, an immigrant who has relatives in Canada, willing to take some responsibility for him, has a better chance of successful adaptation to his new country than does the person who has no such source of help. That is particularly true, of course, if the sponsors themselves are well settled in Canada.

Sponsorship is, in other words, one guide to adaptability. It is not, of course, a perfect guide. Nothing is. Adaptability means that the individual is well-motivated, that he is able to accept certain basic standards and to live with our basic Canadian institution. Adaptability requires of the individual personal characteristics such as perseverance, willingness to work, and a certain degree of emotional and mental resilience. Finally, adaptability means that the individual is equipped to adapt to the working conditions he will face.

Obviously, those who have professions or skills in demand in Canada are equipped to adapt most easily in the first place. But because rapid technological change nowadays so often makes some skills redundant and calls for new skills, long-run adaptability depends also on the ability to retrain. And, while that again has no perfect measure, the best indication we have, other things being equal, is a man's basic educational level.

This last point represents, of course, the basic difference between the requirements of immigration in a frontier society and the requirements of the complex, urbanised, affluent society we are today. Modern technology imposes on people a need to respond, to change, to re-learn and re-train, quite unlike anything we required even a generation or two ago. The modern problem of poverty in the midst of affluence is, very largely, the problem of people who for one reason or another are unable to make these adjustments. Our immigration policy must be designed not to add to that problem. On the contrary, a successful immigration policy will strengthen our ability to overcome the problem.

I would make one final, negative point about adaptability. It is a concept that must be used without any shade of discrimination. The Minister has made very clear his firm determination that immigration to Canada should not be affected in any way by the race, religion, or colour of the immigrant. Anyone, anywhere in the world should have a chance to qualify for admission to our country, to share in the adventure that is Canada. The only issues are the ability of the individual to adapt to Canada and ability of Canada to adapt to the number of immigrants — our absorptive capacity, as it is more often called.

On that, I would remind you that last year immigration was up 30 per cent compared with 1964, and there is every indication of a further increase this year. I am not saying this complacently. I am not suggesting that the standards by which we set some measure of a potential immigrant's adaptability are anything but rough and ready. The best measurements are a matter not of rules but of experienced judgment; that is why we are putting so much emphasis on the training and development of our selection and counselling officers. The more improvement we achieve in that direction, the more successful will be the contribution of immigration to Canada's development.

I have tried to speak to you today in terms of ideals and principles, because I know that you are more concerned about these things than about administrative details. I hope I have made it plain that immigration is secure in its important role in the Manpower Department, and in manpower policies, which are matters not only of economic efficiency but of the development of Canada in all the things that make a man.

Audit Bureau of Circulations 123 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Illinois 60606

VOL. 16 NOVEMBER-DECEMBER, 1965 NO. 5

Publishers' ABC Promotions Serve Double Purpose

When a publisher explains to his advertisers and readers the significance and service of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, he is providing one of the main channels of communication on which the Audit Bureau depends for public education. Without this main line, many readers and advertisers could only ponder the meaning of the familiar hexagon.

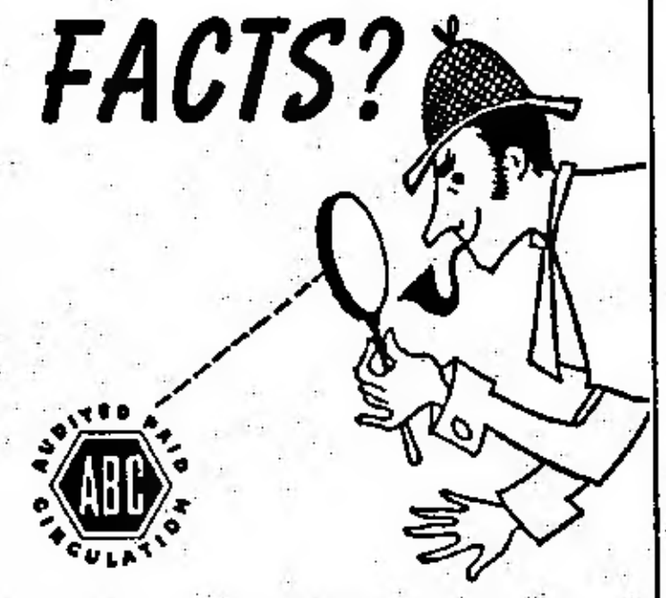
But in so explaining the purpose and function of the ABC, the publisher also sheds light on the meaning of his membership to those who would either purchase space in or read his publication.

Thus good promotional display advertisements serve a double purpose of importance to both the publisher and the Audit Bureau as an organization.

With the cooperation of publishers, sending in their original ABC promotion efforts, the News Bulletin will periodically serve as an idea pool, from which other publisher members may draw inspiration for their own display advertisements or editorial material.

Here are only two such contributions:

HOW DO I KNOW THE FACTS?



The exact number of people who read this magazine is a vital index of its worth. Therefore, any circulation claim must be honest and factual.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations is the organization established by the publishers themselves to verify authoritatively and dispassionately the circulation statements of America's leading publications. Membership is voluntary. Its principal job is to see to it that its members report only the facts to advertisers and the public.

In practice, its statistics have helped editors study the readers and their needs, so that they can more easily plan issues of the greatest possible interest to you.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations benefits everyone — readers, advertisers, and the publishers. Its seal is your assurance of inspiring reading and square dealing, your guarantee of a quality publication.

TOWN & COUNTRY

Using a question and answer approach, the Canadian Jewish Review came up with an ad (right) which devotes a great deal of space to telling the reader almost all of the essentials of ABC operation. Note the ad also includes an interpretation of just what these essentials mean to the advertiser. Several Hearst Magazines ran the second ad (above), which cuts out much detail of ABC operation and speaks specifically to both reader and advertiser on what the Hearst Magazines' ABC membership means to them.

What is the A. B. C. or Audit Bureau of Circulations, and what is its importance?

A. The A. B. C. is a voluntary association of major publishers, advertisers, national and local; and advertising agencies, working together to police circulation claims, and to translate them into facts.

Q. Why are circulation facts so important?

A. Circulation figures are the only honest basis on which print advertising is sold and purchased. Publishers base their prices for advertising on the amount of their circulation, and its quality. An advertiser buys circulation. A. B. C. circulation facts tell him the exact amount at any time.

Q. How does an advertiser know that this is really so?

A. A. B. C. publishers keep exact records of all circulation receipts for subscriptions and single copy sales. These can tell him, too, whether the circulation is sold without a premium, or with one, to induce payment; or whether the circulation is composed of membership in an organization; or whether it is sold on its merit alone. Was the subscription sold on a special rate? Was it paid by mail directly to the publisher, or to an agent? These are just some of the categories of subscription payments which are recorded.

Q. Why are some of these answers so important?

A. Sometimes these answers can tell an advertiser whether the subscriber needs to be coaxed into continuing, or starting. Are subscribers voluntarily buying the publication? Do they need a cut-rate or an added attraction to keep on?

Q. How are the figures checked?

A. The publisher checks his figures, and reports them twice a year to the head office of the A. B. C. These are audited once a year by travelling A. B. C. auditors, who check the names, the receipts, the printing invoices, the bank deposits, the paper used, the ink used, the postage receipts — all of these show the number of copies printed or mailed; and paid for. If an A.B.C. field auditor goes to work for a publication whose books he has audited within a year or so, there is an automatic re-audit by another auditor. An auditor does not audit the figures of any publication for more than two consecutive years.

Q. Does the A. B. C. allow past-due subscriptions?

A. The A. B. C. rules state that all subscriptions up for renewal must be paid within three months of the expiry date. The publisher must keep track of each one. These are considered paid, but not completely so, until paid in full, for the term to come.

Q. Are new subscriptions considered as paid?

A. Not until payment is received for the term in advance.

Q. What does this cost the publisher?

A. The publisher considers the membership as his investment to protect the investment of each advertiser. The publisher pays quarterly dues; the cost of the auditing done in his office, by the hour; and the cost of checking done further, at the A. B. C. head office. If further checking is needed, the publisher pays that cost, too. An auditor spends several days in the Canadian Jewish Review office each year.

Q. Are these the only costs?

A. The greatest cost to the publisher is to see that the records are kept in order and up to date. The Canadian Jewish Review addressograph plates are posted to show the date and method and amount of payment; and the date of the subscription, and the length of its term. A publication must carry on the address label all information that the auditor would need to guide him in checking. A publication which sells subscriptions on short-term, or with a premium, or in combination with other publications, for instance, will carry all that information and more, on the address label, coded in some way.

What do A. B. C. reports and statements say about the Canadian Jewish Review?

They tell at a quick glance the provincial break-down; the amount sold in a period; that the Canadian Jewish Review never sells a subscription on a premium; never with a cut rate; never jointly with another publication; never as part of membership in an organization.

The Canadian Jewish Review is sold on its own merits, and always has been.
It has no affiliation with any organization.

A.B.C. reports and statements supply facts to advertisers.
These facts need to be known for advertising money to be spent wisely and honestly.

A. B. C. publications can never guarantee results. They do guarantee readership.

The Canadian Jewish Review is in its 22nd year of supplying facts to advertisers, investing to protect investments.
The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only publication reaching the general Jewish community in Canada, which can provide audited, paid, A. B. C. circulation facts and figures for the protection of each advertiser.
